Competitive Drill-Essays and Debates-The Medallists.

OXFORD, N. C., May 31.—(Special.)— The commencement exercises of Horne: rade-grounds of the school between the two companies. A very large and fashionable assemblage had turned out to witness the drill. Company A was commanded by its captain, Julian S. Carr. son of Colonel Carr. of Durham, who was among the distinguished visitors, and Company B was under command of Captain George D. Vick, son of Dr. Vick, of Scima. Both the gallant young captains handled their men with skill. The judges were Major B. W. Roysier, Captains S.
W. Minor and W. Lindis, Lieutenant Skinner, and Sergeant-Major Gulick, of the State Guard. The contest was for the colors, and Company A was the winner.

A PRETTY PARADE.

A pretty battalion parade was next on he programme. Then occurred the most necresting feature of the afternoon, the ontest for the medal given for the cadet best drilled in the manual of arms. THE STATE OF TRADE. Continued Rise in the Price of Wheat and Cotton.

NEW YORK, May 31.-Messrs. R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade tomorrow will say: More far-reaching than any other change during the past week, if really warranted by facts, is the continued rise in the prices of wheat and cotton. Real scarcity of either would affect all business. Happily there is still room to hope that the accounts of injury are greatly exaggerated, although there has been some evidence during the week that both the great crops have suffered more than at first appeared. Other changes are almost all favorable, and some highly encouraging. Labor troubles some highly encouraging. Labor troubles are clearly less threatening. Monetary corditions are satisfactory, and the sub-stantial increase in the commercial de-mand is a good sign. Exchanges through the clearing-houses have been greatly the clearing-houses dave been greatly inflated by speculation, and at this time last year were cut down by the coal strike, and toward the end of May, 1898, greatly reduced by bank failures, but for the week they exceed last year's by 19 per cent, and fall only 5.6 per cent, below those of 1893. While the daily average for May is 26.9 per cent. larger than last year, but 7.1 per cent. less than in 1893.

Cotton continues strong, because it is believed there will be much reduction in the yield per acre, as well as in acreage. No estimate based on definite information puts the decrease in acreage at more than 13.5 per cent, which, with a yield per acre equal to last year's, would mean a crop of 8,400,000 bales. Months must pass before there can be anything definite as to the probable yield per acre, unless widespread disaster comes, but the market has been acting as if the future were known. Speculation has diminished market has been acting as if the lighter were known. Speculation has diminished in volume, and the fact that the takings of spinners have exceeded the maximum consumption over 400,000 hales in the Northern States and about twice as much abroad makes the commercial stocks in sight—3,384,562 bales last week—look still larger. The advance his week look still larger. The advance this week has been only a sixteenth, and it is supposed that the stronger speculators have realized. The manufacture is doing well, though not all the machinery is employed, but the demand has been better, and there are occasional advances in the prices of goods.

The Olneyville Woollen-Mills will open Monday, responding to a request signed by some employees, to see if enough will return to make a general resumption profitable. Two or three other mills have granted some increase of wages, but in most branches the manufacturer contends granted some increase of wages, but in most branches the manufacturer contends with serious difficulties. New orders are scarce, and some milis are running short. Iron manufacture is growing rapidly, and the average of prices, which had fallen February lat to 541 per cent. of the prices in October, 1899, have now risen to 59.8 per cent., most of the advance having been in May. Bessemer pig has been lifted to $11.55, and gray forge to $10.60 at Pittsburg by the growing demand. Tank steel platea are $5 per ton higher at Philadelphia, and nail producers have combined, raising wire nails to $1.15 and cut nails to $1 by the carload at Pittsburg. The structural demand is very large, and while the buying in other forms of iron and steel products is still conservative, great confidence prevails that prices will hereafter advance materially.

The failures for three weeks of May have shown liabilities amounting to $7,-114,205, of which $2,402,500 were of manufacturing and $1,230,635 of trading concerns. For the same week last year the liabilities amounted to $7,732,633, of which $1,380,812 were of manufacturing and $3,-275,213 of trading concerns.
The failures during the past week have been 215 in the United States, against 183 last year, and 34 in Canada, against 27 last year.

GAME OF GOLF.

Some Useful Hints for the Benefit of Beginners.

(Tribune.) It seems strange that no short, clear and simple rules for such a popular and growing game as golf have been publish growing game as soil have an increase of for the benefit of the beginner—that is, for those who have no knowledge whatever, to enable them to understand the various manuals which seem rather to be written with a view to set forth the technique of the game to its devotee than to explain the first principles to those who do not understand anything about it. The various articles which have appeared in the magazines, although very interesting from a literary boint of view, hardly serve to clear up the very hazy ideas of any one who has not seen or tried the game. So, perhaps, as there may be many who would like to "chase a quinine pill around a ten-acre lot," if they knew just how to go about it, a few simple and condensed rules may be of service. The first step is to procure clubs: an entire kit, which is both troublesome, expensive and puzzling, is not necessary to a perimer. Three are really all that ed for the benefit of the beginner-that is essential for an ordinary player—a friver' used to drive the ball from the tee" or starting point; a "cleek," for ng distance shots, and, in absence of a time before playing to see that the heavy heads are firm on the sticks, as very bid accidents have occurred from the heads flying off when a shot has been made. No. 27 is the ball generally used. Although links which are laid out by a professional and kept in perfect order by a club are generally best to play on, any one who has sufficient ground may lay out a course which will serve well enough for amusement and exercise. If possible there should be nine holes about 250 yards apart; but five or six or seven will do. There may go from angle to angle in any direction, so that in a limited space the track may be doubled. The holes should be four inches in diameter, and are usually lined with iron, although for an amateur course a sunk flowerand are usually lined with from although for an amateur course a sunk flower-pot is just as good. These holes are placed in the centre of a mowed square of grass about 20x20. The distance between holes is called a "link," and the object is, of course, to go over each link with as few shots as possible, hitting the ball into the hole at each terminus. Each of these holes should be marked with a small flag, which is taken out of the hole for the stroke, and then replaced. At each hole the ball may be lifted out and placed on a "tee." This is a slight elevation of sand or earth which a player generally arranges for himself, a box of earth being put beside each hole for the generally arranges for himself, a hox of earth being put beside each hole for the purpose. After the first strike from the tee the player follows his ball and strikes from where it lies, each stroke counting against his score.

A golf ground should abound in "hasards" or obstacles of every description. These may be anything that is difficult to get over, long grass, roads, water, or even mole hills, or rough ground of any description. One great advantage in this "foursome," each couple playing partners with one ball.

At no time may the ball be "pushed," "scraped," or "spooned." It must be fairly struck at, any move-menf of the club which is intended as a strike being counted. When the ball gets into water or any impossible situation the player may take out, and drop it over his shoulder, paying one stroke by way of penalty. If, on going over the course, a loose impediment is encountered within a club's length of the ball, it may be removed; if further away the penalty of a stroke is counted. Where many play on the same ground there is a certain etiquette to be observed, which is enforced by the club regulations; but on private grounds it is sufficient to remember that any player in front must be on his second stroke from the tee so as to be out of range, and that if people are playing together the ball furthest from the tee should be along the club relayed first the are playing together the ball furthest to the winner of the preceding hole, is a game for all ages, and very old men are often capital golf-players, but to be-come proficient one cannot begin too young.

EAT THEIR PEOPLE.

THEIR AGED AND CRIPPLED.

Arab War-Forests of Coffee.

Captain S. L. Hinde was in the Congo medical service during the recent war which has resulted in the expulsion of all the Arab slave-traders from the Congo State. In this campaign he travelled through a part of the Congo basin that was almost unknown, and since his return home he has told some new and as possible striking things about tribes that have never been studied before, and live about 300 miles directly south of the northern in extent, that is almost a blank on the The Arabs knew the country very well, however, for here they had pursued the slave chase, using part of the natives well, however, for the natives to prey upon the others. It was one of the most densely peopled parts of Africa until the Arab forays, within the pust few years, made desolate a part of it.

Captain Hinde thinks he found in the Batetela people of this region the most remarkable cannibals he has seen. Throughout the whole of their country, he says, the traveller sees neither gray hairs, nor halt, nor blind. The unfortunate who is marked by any physical imperfection is killed and eaten. Even parents are eaten by their children upon the first sign of approaching decreption. These people are probably the only tribe in Africa who eat their own people. The effect, however, is not to deplete their numbers, but to make them superior, physically, to the tribes around them, for they do away only with those who are physically imperfect or upon whom old age is stealing. Captain Hinde says they are a splendid race, and all the finer in appearance because they do not disfigure themselves with tattoo marks nor by filing their teeth.

The Batetela are a very numerous people. About 19,000 of their warriors were in the service of the great slave raider, Gongo Lutete, who helped the Arabs capture a large part of their slaves. This long-headed chief made up his mind that it would pay him to cast his fortunes with the whites, and so he turned his back on his former employers and with his cannibal brigands helped to drive the Arabs out of the country.

PAVEMENT OF SKULLS.
Congo's capital, N'Gandu, is a sight to to prey upon the others. It was one of cannibal brigands heiper to drive the Arabs out of the country.

PAVEMENT OF SKULLS.

Congo's capital, N'Gandu, is a sight to behold, it is a fortified town on the Lomani river, and each of its four gates is approached by a handsome pavement of human skulls, the bregma, or front part of the skull, being the only part showing above the ground. Captain Hinde counted more than 2,000 skulls in the pavement of one of the gates. Every tree in the town is crowned by a human skull. The practice of adorning the trees with skulls is very common among the more savage tribes throughout the Congo basin.

Captain Hinde participated in nearly all the big fights with the Arabs, and in some of them several thousand of the Arab forces, chiefly armed slaves, were killed. After the battle the cannibal camp-followers and fighters among the State's allies would have a great feast. In one hattle over 1,000 men fell, and Captain Hinde had the direction of the burial parties. He found only a few hundred heads and bones. The cannibals had carried off all the meat, and in many cases the whole body, for food. African cannibals, apparently, never eat flesh raw. They always boil or roast it.

The white explorers have never been able to trace the beginnings of this horrid practice until during the Arab campaign, when they discovered that the Baluba tribe, of whom explorers have never spoken as cannibals, have taken, of late years, to eating their enemies who are killed in battle. Only the men, however, induke in the new custom.

It is well known that throughout a large part of tropical Africa the tribes are able to communicate with one another by means of drum signals. There is a fairly well-known general code of signals, though often two or three chelfs will have their private codes, and can talk with one another at distances of five or six miles, their enemies hearing every stroke of the drum, but without being able to under-

Out with success.

REMARKABLE HEALTH.

During many months of hardship there was scarcely a death, except on the battle-field, among the thousands of natives in the service of the whites, and Captain Hinde attributes this good fortune to the women who followed the srmy. As is usual in African warfare, the native soldiers were accompanied by their women, and these faithful creatures relieved the men of all the care they could assume themselves. When camp was pitched it was the women who reared the rude huts and cooked the meal, and they masched heavy laden with the camp equipment, while the fighters had only carry their guns and amunition. The women thus played an important part in the year of hard work while the Arabs were being driven out of the State and across Lake Tanganyika.

Captain Hinde's caravan saw the Congo dwarfs further south than they had previously been observed. One day about a hundred of them, men and women, flocked to the camp from the surrounding forest. It is a curious fact that they are not afraid of ifrearms; they drop when they see the flash, and then run in and spear their enemy or shoot him with an arrow before he has time to reload.

The two great Arab towns of Central REMARKABLE HEALTH. see the flash, and then run in and spear their enemy or shoot him with an arrow before he has time to reload.

The two great Arab towns of Central Africa, both of them the result of the slave chase and the ivory trade, were captured in this war. Nyangwe, on the banks of the upper Congo, was, until this campaign, one of the greatest markets in Africa. When the Heigians attacked it the town contained 30,000 inhabitants, but to-day it has ceased to exist, and its site is occupied by a single house. Kasongo, a little further south, had a population of about 60,000, and here the Heigians captured large quantities of repeating rides and tons of gunpowder. The town has now been entirely swept away.

This war completely changed the political geography of the upper Congo, for the Arabs, who were masters of the country, were driven out of it. It also changed the trade routes, for the traffic which once followed the well-beaten track from Nyangwe across Tanganylka to the Indian Ocean at Zanglaar now goes down the Congo to Stanley Pool and the Atlantic. A very significant fact mentioned by Captain Hinde is that in all parts of the virgin Congo forest which he visited wild coffee is so abundant and so excellent that his party left their tins of imported coffee unopened.

The City Pigeon's Easy Adoption the Ways of the World.

the Ways of the World.

(Chicago Daily Tribune.)

The city pigeon affords an illustration of the radical change which artificial surroundings produce in animals and birds. Naturally one of the shyest of birds, the pigeon, after a short experience of urban lite, becomes as thoroughly at home as the sparrow. But while sociable and confiding, the pigeon is never obtrusive or impudent, as his little British cousin is. Pigeons settle down on the buslest streets and gather up the food which is scattered about in abundance with a quick, energetic motion of the head, as undisturbed by the clatter of the forest of horses' legs about them as if they were in the primeval groves of their ancestors. Horses, in getting to the bottom of their noonday nosebags, spill a good deal of the grain, and the gutters are favorite resorts for the birds.

On this account the proposition which has been ventured on several occasions of shellships the practice of making a kind

In the winter time the big, warm chimneys afford a comfortable shelter from the winds, and the sparrows resort there a good deal, also. Al good many people in the outskirts of town and in the suburbs have pigeon boxes in their barns, but most of the pigeons down town have nests around the big elevators. They get fat from the leakage of the grain curs along the tracks, and are seldom molested by anything more formidable than the small boy with his "nigger-shooter," as the elevators are kept as nearly rat-proof as possible.

The Useful Bacteria.

(Gentleman's Magazine.)

In all departments of farm work microorganisms are active, and without their aid the farmer could make no progress in his arduous and difficult occupation. Their presence on his farm is an necessary as the presence of his larger live stock—his cattle, sheep, and pigs; for without their assistance he could not grow his crops, or make his butter, or ripen his chees. In short, on their presence in the soil, in the manure heap, in the barn, and in the diary successful farming depends, and for the farmer a stock of bacteria is among his first requisites.

Again, the existence of certain large industries is dependent on their action, such as that of brewing. The yeast organism, which effects the conversion of sugar into alcohol, on which fermentative change the practice of brewing depends, was one of the earliest of the micro-organisms of the air to be discovered fifty years ago. Pasteur has devoted long years of exhaustive investigation to the study of this important organism, and has furnished the brewer with information of the mest valuable kind regarding its nature. Hansen, of Copenhagen, has still more recently made elaborate investigations on the mature of yeast. The result of these investigations proves that for every particular kind of beer a particular kind of beer a particular kind of preventes all over the world in certain continental laboratories.

Among other common micro-organisms in the air may be mentioned those which effect the souring of milk—the process known as lactle fermentation. That the souring of milk is due to its contamination with certain organisms in the air no souring will take place. Another interesting organism is seen in the souring of milk take place.
